#trending

A Social-Emotional Learning Curriculum Guide for Middle School

Elizabeth Johnson, M.Ed. and Jillian Luft, M.Ed.
Harness the Power of Youth Voice to Build Social and Emotional Learning & Literacy Skills

A Story-Based Approach that Will Engage Your Students

Students are highly motivated to read Youth Communication stories because they see their own challenges and triumphs reflected back to them. All of our curricula and professional development sessions are built around highly compelling true stories by teens.

In the stories, the writers show how they used social and emotional learning (SEL) skills to make positive changes in their lives. They are credible models for your students. In each session, your students read for meaning and participate in fun, interactive activities that reinforce SEL and literacy skills.

Youth Communication has helped marginalized teens write powerful personal stories since 1980. The stories and curricula have won more than two dozen top awards from the Association of Educational Publishers.

PROGRAMS TO SUPPORT YOUR STAFF

Each Youth Communication program includes:

☑️ One-Day Professional Development Session
  • Experience a lesson
  • Practice essential facilitation skills
  • Learn about the theories underlying the curriculum

☑️ Comprehensive Curriculum Guide
  Each session in the curriculum guide includes:
  • Opening activity
  • Read-aloud and story discussion
  • Interactive Explore the Ideas activity
  • Closing circle and reflection

☑️ Anthologies of True Stories
  Each instructor receives a set of anthologies to use with students in the group.

☑️ Ongoing Coaching
  • Technical assistance for group leaders
#trending

A Social-Emotional Learning for Middle School

Training and Session Plans

Using Real Stories by Real Teens

To learn more, contact: eautin-hefner@youthcomm.org
Social and Emotional Learning for Middle School

Use #trending for:
- Restorative Circles
- Text-based discussion
- Extended Learning Time
- Advisory
- Common-core aligned ELA lessons

This program includes:

Facilitator Training
Session Plans
True stories by teens
Ongoing coaching

#trending includes 36 true stories written by teens, with session plans on:

Identity • Friendships • Bullying • Stereotypes
Relationships • Peer Pressure • School Success

“Amali helped me to see how it feels to be teased. That day, I spoke up because I saw how badly it can affect someone. I felt bad about the judgment I had made without even knowing Amali, and I told myself to remember it the next time a cruel thought crossed my mind.”

Breanna King, from her story, “Standing Up to the Haters”

TO ORDER, CONTACT
Elena Autin-Hefner: eautin-hefner@youthcomm.org

youthcomm.org/#trending
Table of Contents

Introduction........................................................................................................................................... 4

The Youth Communication Approach................................................................................................. 5

Leading a Youth Communication Group .............................................................................................. 8

How to Use This Curriculum Guide .................................................................................................... 11

Community Membership and Leadership ............................................................................................ 14

Group Orientation

Session 1: We Belong Here .................................................................................................................. 17
Session 2: We Have Something to Say .................................................................................................. 23
Story: “#HearUsNow – Voices from #trending” by Youth Communication writers .......................... 28

UNIT 1: Exploring Identity

Session 3: The Mirror and Its Many Reflections ................................................................................. 33
Story: “The Identity Experiment” by Lily Mai ...................................................................................... 39

Session 4: Doing Your Own Thing ..................................................................................................... 43
Story: “All Mixed Up” by Anonymous ................................................................................................ 49

UNIT 2: Culture and Diversity

Session 5: Showing Pride Across Divides .......................................................................................... 55
Story: “Connecting Across Borders” by Jimmy Lee ............................................................................ 61

Session 6: Learning Through Listening ............................................................................................. 63
Story: “Fighting Words” by Margarita Martinez ................................................................................... 68

UNIT 3: Me and My Family

Session 7: Finding Comfort ................................................................................................................ 75
Story: “Home Away From Home” by Caitlin Lemmo .......................................................................... 80

Session 8: Trust Us, We Need Our Independence ............................................................................ 83
Story: “Guarded by Grandpa” by Kiara Ventura ................................................................................. 89
UNIT 4: Friendships That Matter

Session 9: Grateful for Good Friends ................................................................. 95
Story: “How a Best Friend Helps” by Shateek Palmer.............................................101

Session 10: Who’s My ‘Combito’? .................................................................105
Story: “Leaving ‘El Combito’” by Angy Gonzalez....................................................110

UNIT 5: Love and Relationships

Session 11: Everything’s Going to Be Fine if You Get Out of Your Head ..........115
Story: “My First Date Was Torture” by Lucas Mann................................................120

Session 12: Mean What You Say and Say What You Mean .......................125
Story: “Pressured to Say ‘I Love You’” by Julia Smith............................................131

UNIT 6: Peer Pressure

Session 13: When Saying No Is the Way to Go .............................................137
Story: “Cheater to Tutor” by Anonymous...............................................................143

Session 14: Opting Out of the ‘In-Crowd’ ...........................................147
Story: “Goodbye to the Gossip Group” by Carlos Ferreira.................................152

UNIT 7: Sadness, Stress, Anger

Session 15: Using Our ‘Good Things’ to Manage the ‘Bad Things’ ..........159
Story: “Explaining My Life” by Shateek Palmer....................................................164

Session 16: Letting the Outside In .................................................................169
Story: “Nature Is My Salvation” by Emily Orchier ................................................174

UNIT 8: Being Healthy

Session 17: What Can I Eat That’s Healthy and Cheap? .......................179
Story: “My ‘Hood Is Bad for My Health” by Anonymous........................................185

Session 18: When Healthy Becomes Unhealthy ........................................189
Story: “Crash Dieting Took Me Off Track” by Jhanae Shine..................................194

UNIT 9: Success in School

Session 19: Break Bad Habits, Make Dreams Happen ................................201
Story: “Hiding My Talent No More” by Jesselin Rodriguez...............................207

Session 20: Appreciating an Advocate .........................................................211
Story: “Why I Loved Special Ed” by Irving Torres..............................................217
UNIT 10: From Bystander to Ally

Session 21: Don’t Stand By, Stand Up! ................................................................. 223
Story: “Why Are Girls So Mean?” by Anonymous .................................................. 229

Session 22: From Defender to Ally ...................................................................... 233
Story: “My Sister’s Keeper” by Anonymous ............................................................. 238

UNIT 11: Challenging Stereotypes

Session 23: Taking a Second Look at First Impressions ..................................... 245
Story: “Big and Tall” by Abi Akinrosoye............................................................... 250

Session 24: Seeing the Person, Not the Stereotype ............................................. 253
Story: “Not All Asians Get Straight As” by Kelly Tan ........................................... 259

UNIT 12: Me and the World

Session 25: What Can We Do to Make a Difference? ....................................... 265
Story: “Wake-Up Call in Another World” by Maria Zaman ................................. 271

Session 26: Speaking Up About Sexism ............................................................. 275
Story: “The 8th Grade Feminist” by Alice Markham-Cantor ................................. 281

Teaching and Learning Strategies ........................................................................ 286
Common Core Connections .................................................................................. 289
About Youth Communication ................................................................................ 291
About the Authors and Editors ............................................................................ 291
Resources from Youth Communication ................................................................ 292
Session 3

The Mirror and Its Many Reflections

SEL: SELF-AWARENESS/SOCIAL AWARENESS

Story to Use: “The Identity Experiment” by Lily Mai

Story Summary: Lily is curious about how others will see her and how she will see herself if she wears different styles of clothing. Through her experiment, she discovers that there are some ways she likes to see herself and other ways she doesn’t. After experimenting, she has a better idea of who she is, but realizes she isn’t limited to one way of dressing or being.

Learning Objectives
Youth will build their SEL by:
• Reflecting on their sense of self and identity
• Being able to take the perspective of others from diverse backgrounds

Youth will increase their literacy by:
• Making meaning of text through group read-aloud and discussion
• Using their background knowledge to make connections to the text

Materials
□ Two signs for Opinion Continuum (“agree” and “disagree”)
□ Chart paper, markers
□ Drawing paper, colored pencils

Preparation
• Read the story ahead of time. Reflect on your personal response and how the group may respond.
• Read the session plan and prepare the agenda. Plan for the Explore the Ideas activity.
• Before leading the Opinion Continuum activity, clear a large open space in the center of the room.
• Post “agree” and “disagree” signs at either end of the room.
• Create “Three Mirrors” example to model the Draw It activity.
GETTING STARTED (5 minutes)
Welcome everyone and have them sit in a circle. Review the agenda (posted):

Agenda: The Mirror and Its Many Reflections
- Review group agreements
- Opening Activity: Opinion Continuum
- Read and Discuss: “The Identity Experiment” by Lily Mai
- Explore the Ideas Activity: Draw It
- Closing Circle

OPENING ACTIVITY — OPINION CONTINUUM (8 minutes)
This pre-reading activity will activate background knowledge to boost reading comprehension and set the emotional tone for the story.

1. After reviewing the agenda, tell the group that they are going to do an activity where they move around while learning more about what they and their peers think about a topic. Together, they will notice and respect where others stand.

2. While the group is still seated, review the directions. Tell them:
   - “On either side of the room, there are signs that read ‘agree’ and ‘disagree.’”
   - “I will read a statement and you will decide whether it’s true for you (agree) or not (disagree). Then you will move somewhere in between the two signs that reflects your opinion. (If you’re unsure, you should stand somewhere in the middle.)”
   - “Once everyone has moved, I will invite volunteers to share why they chose to stand where they are.”

3. Next, ask the group to stand up and move to the center of the open space you’ve prepared.

4. Read the first statement and ask group members to move to a spot between the two signs:
   - “It’s OK for someone’s style or look to change from year to year.”
5. Once all group members have moved, ask them to notice where other group members are standing. (You can support minority positions by moving closer to someone who is alone at one end of the continuum.)

6. Ask for volunteers to share why they are standing where they are. You might want to ask at least one group member from each side of the continuum. Tell group members they may change their position if they are influenced by another group member’s opinion.

7. After each question, have everyone return to the middle.

8. Repeat for the following statements:
   - “People who often change their style are considered “fake” or posers.”
   - “Clothes, hairstyles, and makeup are the best way to show the world who you are.”
   - “The way people see themselves is more important than how others see them.”

9. Thank group members for sharing their opinions.

READ AND DISCUSS THE STORY (20 minutes)
By practicing active reading strategies while reading aloud and discussing as a group, group members build comprehension and support fluency.

1. Introduce the story: Explain to the group that they are going to read a story by a young woman who experiments with her appearance.

2. Set expectations for reading the story: Sitting in a circle, group members take turns reading aloud. They should be given the option of passing when it’s their turn.

Tell the group to turn to p. 21 in their anthologies. (See the leader’s version in this guide for stories with discussion questions included.)
3. Read and discuss the story together: As the group leader, you should pause the reading when you arrive at an open-ended question within the text (in bold). Ask the group this question and facilitate a brief discussion before returning to the text.

4. After reading the story: Continue to reflect on the story using the question below. Decide if your group will discuss, pair share, write, or draw before reading it aloud:
   • “Would you ever try an experiment like this? If you did, what do you think would happen?”

5. After about two minutes, continue to either the Explore the Ideas activity or Closing Circle, based on your choice as Leader.

---

EXPLORE THE IDEAS ACTIVITY — DRAW IT
(15 minutes)

During this post-reading activity, group members will make connections, build understanding, and rehearse positive behaviors. This activity can be used during the session or to extend the learning afterwards.

1. Introduce the next activity by saying to the group:
   • “Now that we’ve read the story, we are going to draw three boxes to represent the three mirrors that show how we see ourselves, how others see us, and how we want others to see us.”

2. Provide a model for your group members by drawing your own mirrors on a large piece of chart paper. Label each mirror (“How I See Myself,” “How Others See Me,” and “How I Want Others to See Me”) and include details in each about your dress, style, and facial expression. You can also include words or symbols. Briefly discuss how your mirrors are similar or different from one another.

3. Offer suggestions for what group members may include in their mirror portraits (details about clothing, makeup, facial expression and/or words and symbols), but allow them to come up with their own ideas of what they wish to include.

4. Pass out drawing paper and markers or colored pencils.
5. Give group members 10 minutes to complete their drawings. Move around the room offering encouragement and support.

6. Once group members have completed their mirror drawings, ask them to circle the mirror that they feel is closest to who they really are. Ask them to consider why.

7. Time permitting, group members can do a Gallery Walk to share their drawings. Have them lay their drawings out on a table or other flat surface. The group can get up, walk around, and take a closer look at one another’s drawings.

8. Thank these volunteers for sharing. Then, invite all group members to reflect on and share what stood out to them in the activity.

CLOSING CIRCLE (10 minutes)

In Closing Circle, group members make personal connections to the story and share their take-aways with each other.

Guide group members in a go-round share of responses to these prompts:

1. “What stood out for you in Lily’s story, ‘The Identity Experiment,’ and our activities today?”

2. Finish this sentence: “When I look in the mirror, I want to see someone who....”
COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS EXTENSION

If you choose to extend the learning beyond this session, you can use this inquiry question to design an activity to engage group members in community and global issues.

What would happen if I performed my own “identity experiment”?

For further exploration, ask group members to change their clothing style or appearance for one day—it can be a small or big change. Have them keep a log and take notes on how they feel about their appearance, how others respond to these changes and how they wish others (both strangers and friends) would see them when they are dressed this way.
The Identity Experiment
By Lily Mai

One morning last month, I curled my hair and tied a bit of it back to show my face. I also wore eyeliner and my mother’s black shoes with heels and tight jeans. When I got to school, a classmate looked me up and down with a “What’s the occasion?” look. Before I knew it, the whole class was saying things like, “Are you doing something special after school?” and, “Do you have a date?”

I blushed and looked away. I didn’t want to be the center of attention. I knew I looked good, but to me it wasn’t something to talk or brag about. It was more of an inside feeling, a confidence that I’d longed to feel for a while.

Even though the attention was a little uncomfortable, I was happily amazed by all the compliments I got that day. All I’d done was add eye makeup and wear tight jeans, and I felt completely different. And other people saw me completely differently, too.

I wondered, “How much does our appearance affect how people perceive us and how we feel about ourselves?” If I got this big a reaction from a little eye shadow, what if I looked completely different? Would people react differently? Would I feel different?

I decided to do an experiment to figure out just how much our appearance can shape how we think of ourselves. I would try out different identities on different days—goth, party girl, hip-hop, and my normal look—to see if people would react differently.

[“What do you think is going to happen during Lily’s experiment?”]

The next day, a friend who wears goth clothing helped me dress like her. I wore a black lace collar, black Converse sneakers, black pants with gold zippers everywhere, a spiked belt, and silver chains wrapped around my hips. I also wore three huge necklaces, including a heavy back cross on a chain. I drew a black star below my left eye to enhance the dark look.
When I looked at myself in the mirror, I saw the same person, just wearing a different outfit. I didn’t feel different until I was out in public. As I walked along the street, a middle-aged guy looked at me. After we crossed paths, he turned his head and continued to stare. I knew from his eyes that he wasn’t looking at me because I was beautiful, but because I looked different.

More heads turned as I continued down the street. Their stares seemed to say I wasn’t like them and I didn’t belong in this society. I was starting to hate being dressed like this. After being stared at and even laughed at on the train home, my stomach felt queasy and I was crying inside. I wanted to get out of this outfit immediately.

I have friends who are goth and they tell me they don’t care at all when people stare. Their attitude is “screw what everyone thinks—normal people suck.” I think these friends dress goth because it’s a reflection of who they are, but I hated people’s mean reactions. This was not an identity I’d try again.

For my next outfit, I went for a party girl look. I put on makeup and dressed in a green top, a gauzy, black miniskirt, and heeled ankle boots. I felt more naked than I’d ever felt in my entire life. Walking to the subway was embarrassing and I wanted to walk faster to get away, but I couldn’t. Not in these shoes.

I felt everyone’s eyes on my bare legs. I got some comments from guys on the street that made me feel complimented—and some that made me feel uncomfortable and self-conscious. As the day went on, I found that I didn’t like the attention after all. I couldn’t wait to get home and change into a pair of jeans.

For my hip-hop outfit, I wore a borrowed basketball jersey and a flat-brimmed baseball cap. I felt miserable because I thought I looked boyish and fake.

When I walked the same streets as I had in all my other outfits, people’s eyes clung to my face and some girls gave me this weird “Who is she trying to be, dressing that way?” look. When I was in the deli, a teenage girl looked at me up and down and breathed in my entire outfit. I could tell she thought I was trying too hard to fit in and that made me angry because I would never wear something just to fit in.
At the end of the day, there was nothing I liked about my hip-hop outfit. I didn’t look or feel pretty. The shirt was too long, the cap was huge on my small head, and the entire look was way out of my league. I’d never wear it again.

It was a relief to dress as my regular self the next day. I wore a plain black T-shirt and jeans, with no makeup or accessories. I liked the simplicity of the outfit. I felt relaxed, like this was the real me. The quiet, innocent me.

This experience confirmed my idea that we’re judged immediately by what we wear. Our clothes are windows into our identities. When strangers see us, they make assumptions about who we are based on our appearance, and they react accordingly.

I also learned how much my feelings about myself are based on other people’s reactions. In the goth outfit, I didn’t feel one bit different until I went outside. When people started staring, it really hurt and made me want to take off the outfit right away.

And when I wore the short skirt, I felt flattered by some of the compliments I got. I’d never thought I was pretty, but those reactions gave me a little hope that I might not be bad looking after all. At the same time, when men looked me up and down, I felt naked and uncomfortable.

When I look in the mirror, I want to see myself in what I wear, and I want other people to see who I am. This experiment gave me a better idea of who that is. I found that I was afraid to wear outfits like goth and hip-hop, but I was excited about wearing the girly outfits. Maybe I’m more of a girly girl than I’d thought.

I never admitted that to myself before. I didn’t want to be one of those girls who has to buy the latest trends and cries when she breaks a nail. But I actually like wearing girly clothes and a little makeup, and I like getting compliments (as long as they’re from guys my age).

I like feeling comfortable too, though. For now, I’ll probably keep my same look and just wear a little eye makeup occasionally, and maybe even a skirt. One that covers my legs though—I’ve already returned the miniskirt.

Lily was 17 when she wrote this story. After high school, she went to Brooklyn College.